Dear Principal Jordan:

I am writing to you to suggest that you set time apart for counselors to have sessions with students to aid them in their choosing of majors. Many students have a hard time with choosing what direction they want to take in their schooling and having extra input from counselors would definitely help them figure what the best major is and what fits them.

Many students go to college to further their education and earn a degree for the job they want in the future, but are the majors students choose because that is what they love to do or is it because it is a good field to go into? A theory that I have made is that many students are initially drawn to the major that includes things they enjoy doing but several outside influences may sway them from their original choice or influence them to choose another major.

Business, management, and science majors are some of the most common college majors that students choose and are some of the largest majors in terms of students and opportunities they give students.¹ Having a degree in one of these disciplines almost guarantees that students will have an opportunity available to them in the job market and this should be a focus of counselors in their aiding of students.

Sincerely,

[Maurice Robinson]
